The Extreme Acceleration Of Climate Change Is Now Beyond Human Explanation Open letter to delegates attending the 9th Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in Poland (COP9) – click here to open. The extreme acceleration of the most recent climate disruption – including increasing air and ocean temperatures and sea levels, unprecedented rainfall, and extreme weather events – has reached a level of climate change that goes beyond human explanation. Increases in air and ocean temperatures, unprecedented rainfall and sea levels, storms and hurricanes, cyclones and tornadoes, drought and rising temperatures are all occurring at record-breaking levels. These are all linked to the ongoing increase in atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases, principally carbon dioxide (CO2). This global catastrophe is of such severity that it poses a serious threat to people and ecosystems around the world. As global temperatures and rainfall patterns are changing, the recent long-term track record of climate disruption is now showing up in the major climate disruption indicators such as sea levels, growing droughts, and heatwaves. This record is detailed below: The hottest years and months in recorded history have now occurred in the past two years, and the August heatwave is the warmest ever recorded on Earth. Sea levels are now rising at an average of 3.2 millimetres (0.12 inches) per year, twice the rate of the 20th century average, and most of the rise has occurred since 1980. Over the past quarter of a century, the jet stream, which circles the globe, has been slowing down over the poles and speeding up closer to the Equator. This means that the jet stream is now racing faster around the poles than in any previous 10,000 years, and faster than at any time in the past 2,000 years. At the same time, the Arctic is warming at more than double the global average rate, and 90 per cent of the ice-covered land of the Arctic has lost summer sea ice. As a result, there has been a dramatic reduction in Arctic sea ice and an increase in the area of open water in the Arctic Ocean. The Arctic is warming up at more than twice the global average rate. The overall volume of open water in the Arctic has increased in recent years, with the Arctic sea ice now disappearing by the summer in much of the Arctic Ocean north of the Central Arctic Ocean. These changes

JUDGMENT." TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE § 51.014(a)(5) (emphasis added). [3] Chapter nine does not state that a party may appeal a declaratory judgment. Rather, it indicates that a "judgment rendered in an action or proceeding as provided by this chapter may be reviewed by an appeal or by writ of error, as provided by law in other cases of civil appeal or writ of error." TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM.CODE § 51.014(a)(9). [4] The discovery chapter also indicates that a "judgment or appealable order" is appealable. See id. § 51.014(a)(1) (allowing an appeal from an interlocutory order "granting... a temporary injunction"); id. § 51.014(a)(4) (allowing an appeal from a temporary injunction that "grants or refuses a temporary injunction"); id. § 101.021(c) (allowing an appeal from an order that "grants or refuses a plea to the jurisdiction"). [5] To the extent that a party may be able to pursue mandamus relief from a trial court's denial of a plea to the jurisdiction, mandamus would be available to review the denial of a plea to the jurisdiction. See, e.g., TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM.CODE §§ 15.0642, 16.064; Johnson v. Brewer & Pritchard, P.C., 73 S.W.3d 193, 204 (Tex.2002) (explaining that the availability of mandamus review of trial court orders denying motions to dismiss or for summary judgment depends on the interlocutory nature of the order and the availability of an adequate remedy by appeal). [6] If a statute gives the court of appeals discretion to determine its own jurisdiction, it is an appellate court, not a constitutional court. We therefore have jurisdiction over this interlocutory appeal under section 51.014(a)(5) of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code. [7] In Lawrence v. CDB Service Company, Inc., a party argued that a jurisdictionally deficient claim could be severed and the remaining, properly-prosecuted claim could be appealed. 44 S.W.3d 544, 551 (Tex.App.-Houston [14
