[Study on activation of Kupffer cells by lipopolysaccharide]. To investigate the effects of lipopolysaccharide (LPS) on the activation of Kupffer cells. Rabbit livers were perfused in situ, and flow rate of perfusion medium and Kupffer cells in hepatic sinusoids were monitored. Kupffer cells collected by Percoll gradient centrifugation were treated with different concentrations of LPS. Changes in the mRNA level of TNF-alpha were determined by Northern blotting. Indirect immunohistochemistry and immunogold-silver techniques were employed to assess the cellular distribution and morphological changes in the LPS-treated Kupffer cells. LPS induced a dose-dependent increase of Kupffer cell activity, elevation of TNF-alpha mRNA and protein expression, up-regulation of TNF-alpha protein synthesis. The levels of TNF-alpha mRNA were reduced significantly after about 3 h of LPS treatment. The responses of Kupffer cells to LPS were blocked by a neutralizing anti-TNF-alpha antibody and Cyclosporin A. LPS activates Kupffer cells and mediates hepatic inflammatory reactions by the secretion of TNF-alpha. 20. Suppose  $u^* q = -7 * q - 35$ . Let  $x = q - 14$ . Solve -
