Sharif's brother, Anees, was named as a beneficiary of a company owned by his daughter, Mariam, according to state-run television news channel. The company, Al-Wafa, allegedly made hundreds of millions of dollars selling baby food abroad, but was not licensed to do so by the Food and Drug Administration in the U.S. Sharif's other daughter, Maryam, was named as an intermediary in the deal, according to a statement from Senator Mushahid Hussain Syed in The Express Tribune. Rafique Ahmed, an aide to Mariam Sharif, told The Daily Caller News Foundation that the couple had broken no laws. "This allegation is false and baseless and has no merit. The allegations have been responded to by the secretary to the prime minister and the cabinet secretary. Further details cannot be provided due to court proceedings," Ahmed told TheDCNF. He added that Sharif's family hasn't received any paper work related to the case and they also have nothing to hide. Fourteen people, including the prime minister's children, were named in the corruption scandal last week. Prosecutors have recommended jail time for Sharif's sons on Friday. Sharif denies any wrongdoing. Sharif's sons were not immediately available for comment. Sharif is the longest-serving current leader of any Muslim-majority nation, but has been dogged by scandals since he took office in mid-2013. Last week, TheDCNF revealed the May 2017 raid on his family's luxury hotel, which was under construction in Dubai. According to TheDCNF, the FBI also led the raid. His government has been riddled with corruption, including the revelation earlier this month that $1.3 million in jewelry, diamonds and gold was missing from a luxury suite within the prime minister's official residence.
