Prognostic value of blood-based protein markers in patients with hepatocellular carcinoma. The aim of this study was to determine whether blood-based biomarker proteins have independent prognostic value in patients with hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC). Data for all patients with HCC who underwent initial curative surgical treatment were retrieved from a prospectively maintained database. Blood markers were analyzed by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. Paired tumor tissue and blood samples were available from 47 patients and were used to determine baseline expression and percent change in tumor tissue. A multivariate analysis with Cox regression was performed to determine independent biomarkers of survival. A significant reduction in the expression of GRP78 was observed in tumor tissue compared to paired blood samples. A significant reduction in the expression of GRP78 was seen in patients with advanced-stage HCC. Tissue GRP78 expression was an independent prognostic indicator for overall survival ( $P = 0.001$ ) and relapse-free survival ( $P = 0.008$ ). In addition, tumor GRP78 expression was an independent prognostic indicator for liver-disease-free survival ( $P = 0.004$ ). In patients with HCC, tumor GRP78 expression is predictive of outcome and independent of tumor stage and vascular invasion.

The effect of preoperative radiotherapy on the rectal complication rate in patients undergoing abdominoperineal excision. This study assessed the role of preoperative radiotherapy on the rectal morbidity rate in patients undergoing abdominoperineal excision for localised adenocarcinoma of the rectum. During the period 1989 to 1996, 159 patients underwent abdominoperineal excision for localised adenocarcinoma of the rectum, 121 of which received a preoperative course of radiotherapy (preop RT). Patient and tumour characteristics were similar in both groups of patients (radical vs. super-radical resection). There were no differences in duration of hospitalisation or time to resumption of oral intake between the two groups. The rectal morbidity rate was also similar, with only three patients developing anastomotic breakdown (2.5%) and 11 (9.1%) developing pelvic abscess formation. There was no difference in the development of rectal morbidity in the group receiving preoperative radiotherapy (preop RT) compared with
