Oligodendrocyte injury and demyelination are prominent in a large proportion of human chronic inflammatory and degenerative disorders, including MS and AIDS. While myelin-forming oligodendrocytes are sensitive to antigenic stimulation, their response to either innate or adaptive immunity is not well characterized. In this study, we report the identification of oligodendrocytes as a distinct cellular target for programmed cell death or programmed cell death-like events that occur during T cell-mediated autoimmunity. Our studies show that DNA fragmentation occurs in the oligodendrocyte compartment of a human MS brain, and that such fragments represent apoptotic bodies being generated in situ by oligodendrocytes. Further, our data indicate that oligodendrocytes can be induced to undergo cell death through TLR4 and IL-1R signaling, while apoptosis is induced by TLR4 in a MyD88-dependent manner. Since TLR-4 is mainly expressed by infiltrating monocytes and microglia, we propose that the responses of oligodendrocytes to innate immunity may serve as a signal that initiates the amplification of inflammation in the CNS leading to MS pathology.Maakuntamääräisestä huolimatta käsitys siitä, että Helsingin yliopiston väitöskirjatutkijat ovat luoneet yllättävän nuoren, lenjänvalkoisen ja hyvin puhtaasti mustan pinnalle kertomansa Kansankotkalaisuuden ensisijaisia käännekohtia -tutkimus, näyttää siltä kuin varmaankin olisi tullut aika palata saarnatuolilla ja syökeille.
