What's new:

Tuesday, October 7, 2010 Long ago, long before I was ever an adult, I can remember being just a little bit of a teddy bear. I was a toy-sized version of a kid and I loved everything about kids. I liked playing with them, cuddling them, putting them to bed and I got a tiny little bit jealous when I remembered back to how carefree and happy I was as a kid. I really wish that I had been born a little later. I wish that I could have been able to experience the carefree innocence of childhood without the hardships that come with growing up in this world. Sadly, I have learned that that is not how it works. I know some people who can't understand this but the simple fact of the matter is that I really wish I was born into the world of the Warren's. It seems that that is the only universe that even comes close to the reality of what it's like to be an actual kid. I know that people who I'm close to don't really know what it's like to be a child, they just assume that it's meant to be a carefree and happy place. "Let's go be happy" they say and what results is them taking the first step up to the table. One of the only other places I can think of where carefree kids rejoice in being kids without the "urgent need" of adulthood is in The Warren's universe. It's an interesting perspective for me to sit back and watch people fight, worrying about getting home on the last train, about being late for a meeting and having to make a decision in under five seconds. I know that there are always dangers in this world and I do worry about being safe from the evil that wants to hurt me but for the most part I'm looking forward to being a kid. It's a part of life that hasn't really been a part of my life. I remember plenty of instances. When I was young I was chosen as a prankster and decided that I wanted to join the other kids at recess. I thought that just because I was a teddy bear that nobody would be able to tell that I didn't want to go join the other kids. Unfortunately, that idea was for nothing. There were plenty of people who knew what I was
