AutoCAD Activation Code is a registered trademark of Autodesk, Inc. AutoCAD can be used from within a non-GUI context. It is a command-line oriented application, and functions are often executed by the typing of a command. The only UI is a command-line style display, which is usually accessed by pressing the CTRL-ALT-D key combination. The default command prompt looks like: ``autocad -- Some commands have no parameters or are specific to the current drawing. Key commands are for performing various functions. They appear in the command prompt window, preceded by a key, where applicable. Commands with the same name may have different key combinations. `` If a drawing is open, the command is carried out on that drawing. If there is no drawing open, the command is executed on the current drawing. If no current drawing is open, then an exception is raised. (There are some commands, such as 'DefineSection' and 'CreateOrder', that are specific to a single drawing, and do not behave as stated.) Intermediate commands, such as 'Save', 'Append' and 'AppendWorkshop'', are passed the name of a drawing from which to save, the name of a newly created drawing, or an existing open drawing, respectively. Intermediate commands are executed only if there is a drawing to save, a drawing to append to, or an open drawing to append to. Intermediate commands are not executed if a current drawing does not exist. If there is no current drawing, then an exception is raised. Intermediate commands are not applicable in a non-GUI context. Intermediate commands are not valid for the Show command. Common commands, such as 'Append', 'AddToDrawing', 'Align', 'AlignToView', 'AppendSection', 'ApplyAlign', 'ApplyAlignToView', 'ApplyTransform', 'ApplyTransform2D', 'ApplyTransforms', 'CreateGridRef', 'DefineSection', 'Duplicate', 'DuplicateSection', 'Extrude', 'ExtrudeSection', 'ExtrudeToView', 'FitToView', 'GeomCenter', 'GeometryCenter', 'GeometryFlip', ca3bfb1094
