Meta I love my son; I just wish he loved his dad. I love my husband; he just wishes he loved me back. I love my daughter; she just wishes she loved me. I love my parents; they just wish they were alive to see what I have become. After over 20 years together, I have lived with A.D.D.. No matter how I try to overcome it, at this moment, I am still a child. I am angry, sad, confused, scared, lonely, depressed, and trying to survive. I am lost and tired of being lost. I am tired of being cold, sad, scared, and still a child.. I pray that you will give me the strength to overcome this and to become a strong parent. Presented by Jason V.5.3 Photo-Grid - Free Free Software/Graphic Programs. This article will provide a step-by-step. Monday, July 21, 2007 Living la vida loca I have officially been in Mexico for 7 months. Some of you know me, some might not. Some of you I may know and some may not. Whatever the case, as some of you may already know, a few months ago I made the decision to drop out of grad school, and hit the road. As far as I was concerned, nothing was going to stop me from following my heart. In a nutshell, I left my current life to give myself 100% to a new one. So that means I can literally, go anywhere. Anywhere!! I have always had an itch to see the world, and while I may not be doing it in the most healthly way right now, I'm on my way there. I have to say, I will miss California and Southern California and the lifestyle that comes with. But for now I am happy. Very happy. I finally feel that I know what I want to do, and I actually know why I want to do it. And if you remember a post a few months back, I wrote that I wanted to be a mom and a teacher.
