Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a keyboard, and more particularly to a keyboard with a light-emitting diode (LED) flat light source. 2. Description of the Related Art With improvements in personal computer technology, a back-light keyboard is popularly used as an input device of a notebook computer, a portable computer and a tablet. An existing back-light keyboard includes a back-light source, a supporting frame, a light guide plate, a flexible printed circuit board (FPC) and a flexible printed circuit board (FPC) connector. The back-light source is disposed on an outer side of the supporting frame. The light guide plate is disposed over the back-light source and faces a keybed. The light guide plate can guide light from the back-light source toward the keybed. The flexible printed circuit board and the FPC connector are disposed between the light guide plate and the supporting frame. The FPC connector electrically connects the FPC with the back-light source. Therefore, the light from the back-light source is able to be uniformly and uniformly distributed from the light guide plate to the keybed, thereby improving a touch feeling. However, the weight of the existing back-light keyboard is usually heavy. In other words, the weight of the back-light keyboard is usually several kilograms. A use of the existing back-light keyboard may lead to discomfort. Therefore, there is room for improvement within the art. From several architectural periods of history to the medieval times, stone has been the favorite material among the builders. Different shapes, sizes, and designs have been used in the past, whether natural or the artificial. Until recently, it was almost impossible to create a window or door that hasn't been fabricated from stone. Today, we use cutting-edge technologies to create a smooth and seamless metal facade which uses features and shapes that are different from traditional stone technology. Distinctive style of our Old Town "Lidl" Glass has become essential not only for modern architecture but for traditional architecture as well. This shows the ability of this material to seamlessly integrate traditional and contemporary styles. Metal has been a long-term favorite for its toughness, affordability, and bff6bb2d33
