Q: Why were the Mongols not content with Mongolia? After conquering the Ghengis Khan's ancestors' homeland, they did not take to the lands of China, instead moving west. In a similar vein, why were the Mongols never content with Mongolia? A: In the end, China and Mongolia were both conquered by the Song dynasty. And then the Mongol Empire was divided into four autonomous states. Basically Mongolia did not have the resources to support the populations of its own separate country and nor did China to support another government. And the Mongol Empire itself was partitioned soon after (with Ghengis Khan's descendants all being awarded titles and great leaders). A: The Mongols indeed never had full control of Mongolia. By its nature, the Mongolian nomadic lifestyle is dependent on the grasslands. The primary prey of the Mongolian nomads was deer and antelope, and they lived off its milk and meat. They could only sustain themselves for so long on the great Mongolian steppe. The quality of the grass is mostly better in eastern Europe than in southern/central Asia, and that's why the Mongolian nomads were more successful in Europe than in Asia. Historically speaking, the Mongols would have been the first to get rich from the Silk Road after its western opening, and in Mongolia people still live a life of gers and herds on grass, they just use horses instead of camels and cows. The problem with this is that whenever the Mongolians had succeeded in reaching the treasure that lay in the Silk Road, they would have begun to settle. Once that happened they would have transformed that rich region into a stable land and the nomadic way of life would have been lost. While China was wisely prepared for this transformation, Mongolia was not. The Mongols would have had a hard time living in a stable land in their nomadic lifestyle, which was rooted in the grasslands. Another problem is that the Mongolian nomads were not really the kind of people who could protect their borders from invaders or even from distant neighbors, so they had

Hello! Today is March 12th, 2016. We have seven more episodes of Pokemon to review, or Mythology to bring you more information on the two game series. But first, a little bit about our Team on GodsWar but first, some reasons.

We PvP. We PvP heavily. We have no problem killing human players. I mean it.

Why PvP in GodsWar? 1. We love PvP in GodsWar. It is fun and we can show that when PvP is being used in GodsWar right now.

2. PvP in GodsWar is light in comparison to most other PvP games out there. It is easy to pick up, the PvP skills are encouraged so we might even be developing some of our good skills as PvPer's.

3. Since GodsWar doesn't have any ninja's, we don't need to worry about what to cast safely against our opponents. With no ninja's, it makes PvP in GodsWar pretty safe. We have to deal with each other. There's no hiding or roleplay in GodsWar.
