"The just as giants and stargods forged the Western world and the world of the Gods, the gods forged the subjects of their labor, and they opened before them a wide-gaping maw and devoured them, and they became the one force and the begetter of all things. But dark, black seeds of ash grew from this making, and terrible taint and meanness was brooding there. These seeds spewed forth two of their number; they were the Just-As Giants, and it is from their dark seed that the Drow were born, who are not our brothers; not our brethren. And it is from them that the Giants arose, and the Dwarves; and from their deep cravings the Giants, and the Dwarves. And the Golems rose out of these seeds, that they might be the begetters of the works of dark and dreadful workers, and they are as dark and as dismal as their parents. Then all, all the world and all the world of monsters, were in bondage to the Giants and their children. And all the world was divided into three kingdoms; and there were three Lords of the Three Kingdoms and their children. And they made three gods that they might bow themselves before these three Lords of the Three Kingdoms and their children. And they made the world of darkness, the Kingdom of Utters Black; and in this darkness they made their company, that they might live together. They that are known as Demons, and they who hold the Blood Runel, and they who bare the Ash Sword, and they that are called the Chieftains of the Gray Realm. And thus were all created, this wholly and in every respect in their way; until the day when they were one person, and their blood ran together and they were one with common resolve, and every thought was of one." [Effect of the distance to the target on the aiming accuracy of the bimanual football kick]. The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of the distance from the target to the initial position of the legs of the football kicker, on the accuracy of the kick to the football. This aim was achieved by designing a robotic manipulator, which could record the displacements of two artificial feet of a subject during a kick. The data were analyzed by a kinematic model: the state space technique. It allowed the determination of the foot points when the leg moved to a determined distance from the target, in both ipsilateral and contralateral directions. The analysis of the data showed that the initial position of the legs of the football kicker in the kicking direction is usually far from the target but the displacements of the feet of the kicker are very small compared to the distance from the target. Therefore, in the final phase of the kick, the feet of the kicker only need to reach a minimum distance from the target, independent of the distance of the initial position.

The US government has ordered the first investigation into reported cases of government-backed hackers stealing cryptocurrency on behalf of the US military, according to a report. The Government Accountability Office (GAO) said in a report released last week it intends to look into “cyberactivity conducted by unauthorized persons on behalf of the [United States] government and possibly foreign interests”. The GAO said it does not intend to investigate the actions of government-backed hackers but will examine claims of abuse within the scope of its mission. The report said it will look into both the conduct of the military and other government agencies engaged in cyber attacks and the legal standards used to permit this conduct, as well as the potential consequences of such activity. The GAO said it is unclear whether government-backed hackers have launched cyber attacks against their targets in the past. “However, in order to conduct a true oversight assessment, the GAO needs to gain access to the information necessary to conduct this analysis,” the report said. DETAILS TO FOLLOW

Attorney Greg Gittelsohn, founder of Icera, the company that first identified the Stuxnet computer worm, said that the GAO is “pro-active” as it is the first investigation of the issue they are aware of. The Department of Defense is the US government organization most concerned about the issue, according to the
