Proc. of the IEEE:Q: On a game of the same name, can one play another's cards on the same table? In a game called what happens if you play another person's cards? Is it still treated as if you were playing your own cards? Do you receive the benefit of your own cards or do they always get considered as null? A: As a rule of thumb, no, you can't play someone else's card without permission. Any card that has an "Author" field is always your own card, unless it was explicitly marked as belonging to someone else. Even if the author is your friend, you don't play their cards without permission. If the author is untrusted, it gets less clear, but it's usually meant that the author didn't give you the right to play the cards. The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), in cooperation with the industry consortium OASIS, recently published what might be called the first version of the Open Resource Web Protocol (ORW), an open standards-based, universal access point for Web resource discovery and discovery-based information. The ORW guidelines and ORW conformance criteria are hereinafter referred to collectively as the ORW guidelines
