AnR is a classic Survival Horror Roguelike. It is not a linear story driven game. There are no levels to be encountered. Instead, the landscape will become familiar and unfamiliar over time through gameplay experiences. For example, when you first arrive at the planet's surface, you'll likely see a small crater, some dirt, some trees and grass. But eventually you'll find yourself in ruins, scavenging for various parts and fusing them together to form one of the hundreds of possible weapons or augmentations.PvP/RvP: There will be PvP and RvP (Roguelike Versus Player) modes. Play modes can be negotiated with other players, as well as set up in pre-set groups (similar to the "party" system in Left 4 Dead). PvP will be centered around a central event-driven map that has unique regions that can only be accessed from certain points. Players can start at any point in the map, and proceed as far as they can, or can be invaded, and engage in combat with the other players. Players can collect drops, collect mats, sell and buy items, and complete quest objectives. Dynamic events can occur at any time, potentially increasing the difficulty of the map. This will help to give the world a feeling of constant activity while players wander about, doing what they will.Reward:The amount of loot that can be looted from various game areas is determined by the amount of "hits" to a specific game object. For example, a piece of PBR will yield more items than the same piece of material in real-world PBR. As players progress through the game they will begin to uncover rarer and more valuable items, but it will never be "obvious" how valuable an item is. (Although the ore generator and basic food/water/sleep nodes in the beginning stages should be less valuable than those in the end).Misc Information:Here is a list of some misc things that I have planned but have not finished:High Def: I plan to have a high definition version of the game that is updated at least once per month. This will be a fully released game with all content added, no compromises, no glitches, etc. I will work on a system to download the high definition versions automatically and push them to Steam.Community: I plan to do a Game Face Art competition, add features for public rating of characters, and create a mechanism for players to request changes in the game (e.g. grammar/spelling fixes, re
