But she wants to see her children and grandchildren, and be part of their lives, if she can. Most of the elder Ms. Seeger's family are dead or scattered across the country. She has lived the last five years with two new friends, Joan and Tom Moody, in a 12-bedroom Victorian townhouse in Olney, Md. Peggy Seeger is among the aging population that is often ignored and written off. But in many ways she is ahead of the curve. Many in her age group are using social media more than ever before. And, she says, technology has made it much easier to form new community connections. "We don't want to feel left out," Peggy Seeger, 90, told GlobalPost in her Victorian townhouse in Olney, Md. "We are learning new things about the world. But I can't speak for all of us." Peggy Seeger is one of several million Americans age 85 or older who are flocking to social media. According to the Pew Research Center, more than half of the people 65 and older use Facebook, Twitter, or another social media site. "We all get along wonderfully," says Peggy Seeger. "Joan and Tom make a terrific dinner, as well as Will, a friend of theirs, a real gentleman. I like the townhouse." People over the age of 65 "used to have friends who were young and healthy. But they have more people in their circle now who are older,"
