The local-global model (LGM) is a tool to analyze the signal transmitted through ferrofluids to evaluate surface characteristics in the planar geometry. The first step is to construct the electric potential due to the dipole moment created by the dispersed particles under the assumption that the particles behave as dipoles in a Coulombian field. To validate this model, we analyze the data of a planar, dipole-like ferrofluid by applying the LGM. The model is then used to analyze the sensor response of well-dispersed monodisperse and polydisperse ferrofluids. The relationship between the LGM and experimental measurements was found to be useful for understanding the stability of the dispersed particle system. Our results confirmed the usefulness of the LGM by comparing the LGM with other models when analyzing nanoparticle-based ferrofluids.Blocking of the HIV-1 envelope proteins on lymphocytes by specific antibodies in AIDS patients. The presence of anti-gp 120 antibodies in the sera of AIDS patients was investigated with respect to inhibition of binding of the envelope protein (gp120) to OKT4- or OKT8-bearing lymphocytes. An increase in inhibition activity was observed in sera from AIDS patients with other opportunistic infections, suggesting that this phenomenon is not strictly related to the presence of HIV-1 or a common antigenic component of the virus. These data provide evidence for an important participation of anti-gp 120 antibodies in immunodeficiency.1932 Tipperary Senior Hurling Championship The 1932
