The quest to find the one who placed the curse upon your partner has led you deeper and deeper into the Ink. Monsters from the deepest reaches of the ink emerge, punishing you for your crimes against the Otherworld. Your partner has been kidnapped – now she must be rescued. The key feature of Pigasus: you can summon a new creature by spending Essence and you can purchase powerful items in your Lair from the Pigasus. Van Helsing II: Pigasus has three distinct difficulty settings, which affect the monster and the challenge level. The difficulty settings will be explained to you when you're accessing the Lair for the first time (with the default difficulty level).Q: Can't get login service to authenticate user The user can authenticate successfully: $U = $client->User->login('obie', 'obie@email.com'); $U->user_id; And this returns the user ID - it's a valid email, I checked with the service. But I can't get it to authenticate a user against the service. No matter what I do, the authenticate() or login() functions return false. I have added the 2 default access tokens and the default email token, and verified they are in the database. $client->accessToken->expires; // 3600 $client->emailToken->expires; // 0 $client->accessToken->body; // {"access_token":"xxxxxxxxxxx.....","id":12345,"scope":["read-email, write-email"]} The only thing I'm really able to guess here is this: The idea being that both $client and the user are not of the same version. But that doesn't really make sense, as it was working before and is still working now, on the same code, with the same user. A: From my experience I can tell that the problem is that both $client and $user object is not in the same version, which makes them not recognized as a user. But if you'll get them in a certain version you'll not have this problem. P.S. The problem seems to be when you only login with email

In 1943, Second World War was in a deadly progression. Pirates of the high seas has attacked the eastern coast, inflicting great losses. Only few fighters were left to defend Japan. Against this background, the player will be asked to join the 313th Sentai, a Special Attack Corps, fighting against an extensive number of enemy warships. Kuroshima Shoten is Japan's largest building company, and the island's defenses are managed by them. The SDF (the Japanese Air Self-Defense Force), including the 313th Sentai, had the largest force against the enemy fleet, and sent to cover the Pacific Ocean, Asia-Pacific region to defend Japan, but in the area north of the theater of the great crossroads, the enemy's largest force has established a terrifying foothold. The 313th Sentai was then built to stop the enemy. Each fighter needs to launch many kinds of mission, ranging from air support to intercepting enemy bombers. The composition and arrangement of all the fighters requires such a high level of cooperation with the users that the 313th Sentai was established as an independent unit. This IJAS game was developed by the 'Fighters' project team. Key Features: 1. Mission In the standard 'Guardian of the Home' scenario, assist the 313th Sentai to defend Japan, covering the entirety of the theater, against enemy attack. The enemy fleet includes large warships, including aircraft carriers, bombers, and even battlecruisers. Defend the entire region, from the north of the theater of the crossroads to the South. 2. Made in Japan Play the game made in Japan, where excellent and realistic visuals were created with high graphics, and atmospheric sound to feel the fights. 3. Independence Play with a cool game that can not be replicated in other games, and shoot down the enemy all by the 303rd Sentai. 4.
