Q: Independence of two \mathbb{R}^2 -vectors First, is there any general way to determine whether a pair of vectors is independent? If not, what happens in the following case? Say v_1 and v_2 are any \mathbb{R}^2 -vectors. Suppose also that $v_1, v_2 \in \mathbb{R}^3$, and let z_1, z_2 be three orthonormal vectors which are mutually perpendicular to v_1, v_2 (so they are of the form $z_1 = v_1 \times v_2, z_2 = \frac{v_1 \times v_2}{|v_1 \times v_2|}$). Then: z_1, z_2 are independent iff v_1, v_2 are independent. Does it work for any pair of 2-vectors? A: I don't think that it's a good idea to assume that a pair of 2 -vectors (let alone vectors of any dimension) is independent if and only if they satisfy a certain condition. For example, if you choose $v_1 = (a,0,0)$ and $v_2 = (b,0,0)$, then $z_1 = (a,0,0) \times (0,0,1) = (0,a,0)$, $z_2 = (b,0,0) \times (0,0,1) = ($

The Colosseum is only one of Rome's greatest attractions. Though the site is ancient and the sacred history is littered with tragedy, a visit to the Colosseum leaves you with a more spectacular view of history. Today, the Colosseum is a mecca for fans of action films, thrillers, video games, and pop culture in general. Exterior The exterior of the Colosseum provides a grand canvas of time and Roman history. This three-story, fifty-foot-tall limestone façade was built in 72 AD and bears the weight of this once sacred site of the Roman Empire, located at the heart of ancient Rome. The rich colors, classical style, and mock-Roman architecture of the Colosseum can be seen throughout the city. The sheer height of the Colosseum lent itself to being used as a vantage point for the classical and medieval siege warfare that was commonplace during the Roman Republic. In fact, this architectural marvel influenced 20th century architects who continued to use the Colosseum as inspiration. Dome The Colosseum is a glorious example of 2nd century Roman architecture. From the front of the site, the barrel-vaulted exterior offers a dramatic frame for the entire façade. The design of the barrel-vaulted dome is the result of three dimensional mathematics and is visible across the Colosseum's auditorium. The structure itself is supported by solid concrete piers through which run hollow columns. The three-tiered seating along both sides of the auditorium overlook the Arena floor and the remains of the ancient Roman streets.

Arena Floor The interior of the arena floor is one of the most impressive sights in ancient Rome. Here, athletic contests, military conflicts, and executions took place. This roughly rectangular shaped floor is comprised of sand, stone and a concrete base.

Entrances The entrances of the Colosseum seem much larger than the actual structures they adjoin. The enormous arches of both entrances are composed of concrete and stone. These arches were designed to hold the immense weight of the Colosseum's interior. Ground Floor The ground floor of the Colosseum is largely devoid of any visual appeal. The architect of the Colosseum hoped to save on materials by using concrete and stone to build the structure. The ground floor is intended to serve as a communal area. Related Art Along with the development of science and technology, the liquid crystal display (LCD) is employed in a wide range of fields. Compared with the transmissive LCD, the reflection type LCD, as the light-saving and low energy-consuming liquid crystal panel, has attracted attention due to its low power consumption. Currently, the reflective display device based on an organic light-emitting diode (OLED) has been widely developed. In the reflective display device based on the OLED, the light generated in the OLED emits in all directions. The light coming from the edge of the display device is reflected by the reflection surface and transmits to the display panel, causing the strong noise, which hinders the reflection of light.Q: Bash globbing and set -e I am aware of the BASH FAQ, but there is one bit that is raising a question for me. For large files (which is my problem), I want to ensure that errors are caught before the script exits. I am aware that the TRY statement works, but I'm not sure it is an appropriate solution for batch processing. The problem is I cannot take any action to abort execution of the script on an error; this is a production system and forcing a user to stop a script because of an unexpected error is bad in my opinion. I've noticed that most people tend to add the -e trap_all flag to the set builtin, which works for a single pass through the script. However, this has the side effect of rendering the set -e command itself useless, as any error during a single set would trigger any associated traps. Can I use set -e to catch multiple errors? How do I

East Midlands Coal is a historical scenario of the coal industry in Nottinghamshire, which has arrived for Train Simulator in classic British Rail fashion! In the mid-1980s, the East Midlands was still firmly coal-reliant, as its power stations relied on the production of lignite coal. One such power station in Nottinghamshire was High Marnham Power Station; a 14-mile branch of the Robin Hood Line. The line was fed by a total of eight collieries, and by 1987 High Marnham was supplying 2% of the country's needs for electricity. In order to facilitate faster unloading of coal at power stations, the "merry-go-round" system was introduced; MGR trains would deposit coal while on the move, loop around the power station or run around the consist and head straight back to a colliery to pick up more. This seemingly endless operation served power stations for decades, and in some cases, British Rail ordered locomotives specifically for coal-hauling MGR duties. In fact, one Class 20 locomotive, number WJ542, was tasked with the specific job of coal-hauling MGR duties. However, the industry declined in the 1990s as the need for coal-fired power in the UK diminished, and High Marnham eventually closed in 2003. While confined to the history books, you can get a taste for MGR coal services at their 1980s best, as Creative Rail have brought the dusty beauty of East Midlands Coal to life in Train Simulator!
