But one more closely related to a high school math class than you might think remains pretty credible – and the whole thing is still under investigation. So you're thinking you've seen every version of the events surrounding the assassination and assassination attempt in the world? If not, this one is for you. Aside from the obvious Lee Harvey Oswald angle, a woman named Judy Nichols claimed that she saw hit list and "assassin's manual" that she had found hidden in the barn of Lyndon Johnson at Sam Houston State University. When we spoke to her at her home outside Boston, she told us the whole thing was "foolproof." The evidence? Well, she had that. She had also met Lee Harvey Oswald in the states in the 1950s, and he had told her about a letter he'd sent to her with details about the assassination (which led to this sequence of photos being published in conspiracy circles). The theory: "Somebody

Many people were participating, including organizers, supporters, and participants. According to social media, a thousand people were there! Activists with the Animal Justice Network (AJN), including its executive director, Jessica Al-Crow, were mobilizing communities in Vancouver, Burnaby, and Toronto to speak out against fur in New York Fashion Week shows. Al-Crow was joined by activist and animal rights advocate, Karina Gould. Zoe Potter of AJN's Animal Justice Network speaks out against the fall fashions of New York Fashion Week. Zoe Potter/AJN "This year it was the Canadian fashion industry that turned down the opportunity to have a high fashion show in the city," she said. "We've seen our local municipalities, companies, and support organizations all say we're not looking to go big on fur, we're trying to reduce." She said the reason for the fur-free week is simple. "We want to make New York Fashion Week have a positive image for the industry and for Canadians," she said. "We're making a statement." They were in front of City Hall, where they were promptly arrested. Potter was charged with trespassing and Gould was charged with disorderly conduct. They were released without bail, pending a court appearance. AJN, in an email dated May 16, urged citizens to speak out against New York Fashion Week's "expansion of the fashion industry's killbots." Karina Gould of AJN poses in front of City Hall with hundreds
