Photoshop Elements is a free version of Photoshop that enables home users to make adjustments to photographs without paying a monthly license fee. However, Elements' limited features and interface make it less useful for professional work. The following sections take you through the main features of Photoshop and show you how to use them to enhance the quality and aesthetic appeal of photos. Photoshop's many features are covered in this book in more detail. Figure 8-1 shows a photo that was edited using Photoshop, and this section features the editing process. **Figure 8-1:** See just how far Photoshop goes. Troubleshooting You can fix the same mistakes thousands of photographers make. The following suggestions can help you identify areas that need improvement, including some common problems: Too much contrast: Some problems start with the Auto Levels feature. This feature can help you avoid such problems, but you may need to remove the feature temporarily to make sure that it doesn't change the appearance of your image in undesirable ways. The Auto Levels feature has a setting that limits the contrast, which you can access by pressing Ctrl+M. You can reset the Auto Levels feature by pressing Ctrl+0. Too much shadow: Shadows can be a problem. Remove reflections with the Levels feature (by pressing Ctrl+L) or with the Eye Dropper. Shadows, once removed, can be made darker and lighter in the Levels adjustment with the eyedroppers (by pressing Shift+Ctrl+L). If the Shadows adjustment is too light, reduce the Saturation (as described earlier) in the Levels tool's dialog. Too much light: If you apply light to an image, the light can be too bright, even if the rest of the image looks fine. This type of problem is most often seen with underwater images, where the shadows on the seafloor can be too light, as shown in Figure 8-2. Adjustments made in this type of situation are discussed in the "Adjusting the colors" section, later in this chapter. Problems with noise: Noise is the grain that occurs when you photograph or scan a photo. It's usually a problem with the camera, but you can get noise in your photo even when using the camera on a tripod. The good news is that you can fix the problem quite easily. Adjustments made with the Clarity and Sharpness adjustments are discussed in the "Adjusting image quality" section, later in this chapter. **Figure 8-2

How to use Adobe Photoshop elements to edit RAW images RAW files are the perfect format for high quality photography. RAW files are also the most popular files format today, because they can be edited into a variety of different formats. To edit a RAW file, start by opening it in Photoshop Elements. Select Edit > Convert to Sepia Tone. On the Convert to Sepia Tone dialog box, there is an option to select a sepia tone and a gamma. Select a gamma of 2.3. To select the sepia tone, there is an option called "Choose a hue", where you can choose the color or auto-detect. To set the color, you can use the RGB colors, or you can use the hue from the color wheel. On this "Image> Adjustments> Brightness/Contrast" dialog box, there is also an option to set the saturation. How to use Photoshop Elements to edit RAW images The first thing to do is open the RAW file in Photoshop Elements. Next, select Image > Adjustments > Brightness/Contrast. On the Brightness/Contrast dialog box, there are sliders for Brightness, Contrast and Saturation. In the Color Wheel, you can also see the color wheel and from there you can drag the color to select it. On the "Image> Adjustments> Levels" dialog box, there is an option where you can set the Exposure and White balance. The Threshold function of Levels can be used to remove noise from images. You can also use the Remodeling effect to remove "red-eye" in a photo. The spot healing tool helps you to remove undesired artifacts from images such as dust, scratches or blemishes. The Spot Healing Brush You can also remove red eyes, skin spots or defects from a RAW image by using the Spot Healing Brush. When using the Spot Healing Brush, hold down the Alt key and click on the eye, skin spot or defect you want to remove. When you're finished, the Spot Healing Brush dialog box will appear. The Spot Healing Brush works best when there are a variety of colors in the spot and the background is not too bright. If you are not happy with what the Spot Healing Brush did, you can 05a79cecff

Q: What should I do when my current developer leaves? I was working with a guy for 2 years and he left today after a big argument. We had a huge database. I need to finish it in a short time but I have no idea how to do it. I don't have enough time and he doesn't have my previous codes. Can you please help me? A: Wrap up everything up in a nice design that can easily be isolated and copied if needed. Honestly, I've had to do this a couple times. A: Your work would usually be released upon his departure. Although he has your previous codes, there is a good chance that he is not familiar with your logic in the situation. If you have to complete in such a short time, then you probably need to do some research on the steps that you need to take. You may also write some unit test cases. In these cases, we usually do not test end result of such a project. We do, rather, write unit test cases to make sure that the sequence of events that make up the end result of the project are correct. Good Luck! Q: Javascript Regex - replacing a pattern of characters from a string in an array of strings My goal is to turn h/y/z into h/d/y/z by replacing the characters from "x" through to "z" with every character. My starting point is: var string = h/y/z; string.replace('x','s'); and so on to replace each individual character. Any suggestions? A: Well, simply try: String.replace(h/g, 'xx') Because the regular expression h/g tells the String.replace function to replace all occurrence of "x" with "xx", and g is a flag to "global match". hope that is what you need. regards A: This should work: var array = ["a","b","c","d","e"]; var string = h/b/c/d/e"; for(var i in array) string = string.replace(array[i],i); console.log(string); h/a/b/c/d/e
