I'm doing this to make a text editor compatible with the Chinese letters (without getting rid of the ü,ö,ü,ä,ö,ö,ö,ö.... etc.) A: Microsoft Visual Studio 2005, 2007, and 2010 for Windows XP, Vista, and 7, Microsoft Visual Studio Code, and Visual Studio 2012, 2013, 2015, 2017 for Windows 8 and later all read UTF-8 encoded files. For an application that you wrote, or downloaded from somewhere, it's up to you to make sure it reads UTF-8 encoded files. If you downloaded the code from the Microsoft site, it may have automatically set itself to read UTF-8 without your knowing. However, if it's a problem with your code, that is independent of the encoding, and just any application, then you must make sure it is set to read UTF-8. If you are opening a file, or reading a file, then you set the character encoding when opening the file or reading the file. For example, if you are reading a text file: byte[] bytes
