What could it do for a person? PMA is designed to diagnose and problem-solve issues and problems that your browser may have with PDF files so that you can better understand and view those files. The idea, stated bluntly, is that compounding the problems creates a serious problem. You can also search for the History tab in Safari, and select the document, and click the Restore button in the upper right corner of the tab. You'll be asked to enter a document name, and that file will be restored. Mozilla vs Google. Mozilla has filed a new lawsuit to block Google's continuing illegal practice of scanning and keeping people's browsing histories. This is the third lawsuit against Google in 18 months, and includes claims about the way Google's Street View vehicles are designed. Google may have been attacked by a piece of malware, and there is evidence the vulnerability was created by the Russian security firm Kaspersky. No, it's not your browser being scanned. Kaspersky published a technical paper in April, 2015, indicating that the flaw that was exploited by the malware was fixed in a build of Android released in April, 2014. That means Kaspersky is actively trying to find ways to get that sort of malware to infect Android devices, but it's not succeeding. This may be because it's being used against those who download movies and other media. The case highlights the risks of having "cookies," the bits of data that websites transfer to your computer, even when you're only visiting one website at a time. It's also a chilling reminder that your browsing history may be the target of hackers intent on "selling" that history to advertisers. Mozilla has a history of fighting for the users' best interests. Back in 2012, it sued the search giant over its intention to reorganize all of its search engines under one umbrella, and to charge for the service. Even though the company abandoned that proposal, it was one of the first to question and try to fix the "DoubleClick" settlement that allowed Google to collect personal data about users and sell it to third-party advertisers. We may have all the rules in place in the form of laws and regulations, but we still have many to learn. This is a very efficient way to let people know they should watch this movie, because they have seen it
