modal Window that allows. New York and Toronto face the most challenging winters in the world with the northern conurbations squeezed between an Arctic and a maritime climate. As temperatures plummet low in the north there is the risk of conditions getting frozen in over a longer period of time. Some snow and ice occurs already in November, though not on a scale found in the Southern Hemisphere for a variety of reasons. These may include the complete polar vortex, a circular cold air mass that engulfs the Arctic, and the Arctic Oscillation. In the next 30 days (click here for our forecast) temperatures are expected to fall below -30°C in New York and Toronto, with the coldest air hitting the city on Saturday 8th December. New York and Toronto also both face the likelihood of rain and snow showers, with snow eventually settling on the ground. New York city and Long Island can expect to see between 2 to 6 inches of snowfall on the ground with 6 to 12 inches reported in areas further south. The effect of the heavy snow and cold could also bring ice and snow to Toronto, with 5 to 10 inches of wet snow across the greater Toronto area. The warmth will not return until the New Year. Highs will fall to between -3°C and 0°C . A winter storm will hit in late January and snowfall will spread across the eastern part of the US. Cold air will linger in the east, with temperatures falling below -30°C for longer periods. This could lead to ice and snow extending well into January. The arctic cold could make its way to the UK too.

The same weather pattern as that experienced in North America could bring snow to southern England in early January. Microsoft Windows 10, the upcoming release of Microsoft e79caf774b
