just good. Ryu | 2017/07/23 (Manila, Philippines) I was the owner of a former game studio. I was in the game industry for 15 years. I gave up this industry as of July 2011. 15 years of work, counting from day one, I gave up the industry. I quit as of July 2011. And all this time, I thought that I would get interested again. After all, some things are a part of you, and you can't not get interested. I was very excited that I could become a part of the game industry again. The reason why I thought that I could get the possibility to rejoin was as follows: - Being able to get to know the "mechanics" of the game industry - Networking - Being able to once again talk to people who are working on AAA games - Being able to talk to people who are working on indie games - Being able to join games with people who are passionate about game development In short, I thought that the game industry was still there and alive. I thought that the quality of the game industry had not yet reached its peak, so I thought that I might be able to work on a AAA game or an indie game again. And it was true in certain respects. It was true that there was a wealth of talent out there, but in this aspect, the game industry has already reached its peak. The game industry has already reached its peak in terms of quality. About that, I will speak about the quality of the game industry. The game industry is a place that utilizes talent. And in the game industry, the amount of talent

used for a AAA game is measured in, at best, 10%. The number is only measured in 10% of the total amount of talent used for a AAA game, and that's for just one part of AAA games, e.g. the core engine. And of course, the same is true for indie games. bff6bb2d33 free to start their own businesses and have the opportunity to make more money than they could ever imagine. Most people would find it almost impossible to dream of a nine-figure salary. But too many people still hate their job so much that they'll do almost anything to get out of it.
