Q: Having trouble wrapping my head around arrays I am new to ruby and I am really not sure what is going on. I am trying to create a method that takes a string as a parameter and returns a new string that is a unique array of letters created from that string. For example: puts Yahoo! Mail 2013 Portable Yahoo! Mail is a web-based free e-mail service offering free webmail as well as POP3/IMAP4 access and a web based portal. Yahoo! Mail uses a proprietary protocol, which includes YAHOO!, and also features a web-based interface, with applications for Microsoft Windows, Mac OS X, iPhone, BlackBerry and Android. You can check your mail in the web browser, then download all the messages to your computer. The Yahoo! Mail app on the iPhone is excellent, and they just re-branded their web client, so the mobile app is the same. One of the advantages of this app is that you can check your email on the go. You can also download the Yahoo! Mail for Windows 8 app, which is a universal app, meaning it will work on both PC's and tablets. There is also a Yahoo! Mail desktop client available, though it is no longer recommended. One of the obvious drawbacks of yahoo! mail is that it doesn't offer any desktop client, so if you want to check your email on your laptop, you'll have to either use the web version or use an app for a phone or tablet. Yahoo! Mail is a web based service. This means that a web browser is required for its use. If you are a regular net surfer, Yahoo! Mail is probably the most natural place to go to check your yahoo! mail if you are using the browser, as all of the basic functions and tools are there for you to use. Yahoo! Mail is free to all users, and the company has even gone ahead and launched a little league team, the Yahoo! Mail
