News & Media Spanos raises another $100,000 in class action suit SAN FRANCISCO — In a California federal court ruling that could impact consumers' ability to proceed with class action cases, U.S. District Court Judge Ronald Whyte today lifted an earlier dismissal from a $100 million San Francisco commuter rail lawsuit against the rail company. The dismissal was sparked by the company, SFO Railway, suing customers to recover $100 million in unpaid invoices under a state court's order granting a preliminary injunction. Whyte ordered that the suit be allowed to proceed under state court rules and law. "We are pleased with Judge Whyte's decision," Spanos said. "We think it's the right decision for the class and we plan to proceed with it." Spanos contends the company should not have been allowed to obtain a temporary restraining order in state court seeking payment of invoices, including those that have not been paid for years. Spanos, in a related lawsuit in January, asked Whyte to remove the case from state court. Today, Spanos asked for Whyte to allow the case to proceed through the federal court and a hearing on the preliminary injunction was scheduled for next month. Spanos is seeking reimbursement for costs of legal bills, travel expenses and attorney fees of its members who defended the lawsuit in the state court, although he

Regex: Get a substring after a specific match I have a huge log file with users: a user b@1234.org I only want to get the email address after "b@1234.org" the number and the domain are random. How can I do that? A: You have to use Regular Expressions to get what you need. You can use this: [a-zA-Z][a-zA-Z0-9+.-]+@[a-zA-Z0-9]+\.[a-zA-Z]+ Which means: [a-zA-Z] will match a letter [a-zA-Z0-9+.-]+ will match a letter or digit (0-9 plus.) and hyphen @ will match the @ symbol [a-zA-Z0-9]+ is a string with the length of one or more \. is a literal period [a-zA-Z] will match a letter You can use the Regex object to check the position of the @. Then you'll need to use the Regex.Match with the object and index where to look for the @ to get only the information after. Here's how you can do: using System; using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Linq; using System.Text; using System.IO; using System.Text.RegularExpressions; namespace
