The aim of this study was to assess the effect of therapeutic doxycycline administration on the growth of the established mouse mammary tumor cell line MC57D. We have previously shown that MC57D is dependent on beta-catenin-TCF signaling and that this dependency can be restored by activation of Wnt signaling using the intracellular adenoviral expression vector carrying a beta-catenin-TCF-4-enhanced green fluorescent protein fusion construct. MC57D mouse mammary tumor cells were injected intraperitoneally into syngeneic host mice. At day 14, when tumor growth was robust, animals were divided into two groups that were given either doxycycline at 10mg/kg/day or 1% sodium carboxymethylcellulose as vehicle by oral gavage daily for 30 days. Tumor growth was monitored by laser Doppler flowmetry and bioluminescence analysis. The response of transplanted tumors to doxycycline treatment was measured by immunohistochemical staining of beta-catenin, c-Myc and e-Cadherin, and by using Western blot analysis of TCF target genes. Treatment of animals with doxycycline prolonged survival by more than 25% compared to control animals (p
