As you'll see from the list below, all the modifier classes need to know about these issues -- it's all about the existing classes and the way they work. In particular, BL_Hit_Player needs to be aware of moving on pipes, for the physics_methods.cc file, so it should see that the moving of the player inside a pipe is not allowed. The moveToParent() method on BL_Moving needs to know about pipes. If the BL_Moving takes into account a translational velocity during its method, the BL_Flying needs to know about the possibility of changing the velocity vector during a pipe movement. The BL_Flying class needs to know about the possibility of changing the velocity vector during a pipe movement. It should be possible to move the player off a pipe if there's no way to tell what state the pipe and the player are in. When a BL_Moving or BL_Flying lands on a pipe, there may be just one way that the pipe can be moved back into the parent. It needs to be possible for the BL_Moving or BL_Flying to know that it's no longer possible to move the pipe. This needs to take place while the BL_Moving or BL_Flying is colliding with the pipe
