Aromatase activity in human breast cancer cell lines. Human breast cancer has recently been associated with estrogen production.

Measurements of cytosolic aromatase activity in a group of breast cancer cell lines are presented. Correlation of the rates of [3H] and [14C]aromatase conversion of [3H]androstenedione to [3H]estrone and [14C]estrone, respectively, in these cell lines with those established for normal breast tissue suggests that some of these cell lines with androgen receptor activity may have increased steroid aromatase activity due to receptor-mediated stimulation of the enzyme.

Q: How to stop/un-run a.vbs file script? So for one of my assignments I have to use a.vbs file in order to create the html code for a website and my professor wants to know if there is a way I can stop/un-run that.vbs script while still in the command prompt and also one more problem, I'm not allowed to use website creation programs to create my own website like front page, power site etc. I have to use the.vbs method and once that has been run to complete the code, it's up to me to add the necessary coding to make the html code. So how do I stop/un-run that.vbs file? A: Just close the cmd window, or if that doesn't work - run shutdown /s /t 5 to shutdown the computer (on Windows this goes to the background, doesn't matter if you run a cmd or not)
