Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a catalytic converter for the exhaust gas from an internal combustion engine, and more particularly to an improvement of a catalytic converter comprising a honeycomb structure through which the exhaust gas is allowed to pass. 2. Description of the Prior Art In recent years, as disclosed in, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,343,945, there has been developed a catalytic converter for purifying the exhaust gas from the engine of a motor vehicle and the like. The catalytic converter is disposed to the exhaust passage which branches off from the engine and, in general, the catalytic converter includes a three-way catalytic converter which is capable of purifying the exhaust gas in all the conditions from the lean-burn to the rich-burn and the NO_x-lean-burn. The honeycomb structure is used for the catalytic converter in view of the purifying property of the three-way catalytic converter. By the way, generally, the honeycomb structure is used as a carrier, for example, in the catalytic converter for purifying the exhaust gas from a motor vehicle in which the need for the purifying property is relatively weak. However, in a catalytic converter for purifying the exhaust gas from a motor vehicle, the honeycomb structure is required to have the function of absorbing the vibrations which are imparted to the catalytic converter by the driving of the motor vehicle, to be resistant to the heat of exhaust gas, and to have the function of purifying the exhaust gas. Also, the honeycomb structure is required to have the function of absorbing and reducing the shock which is caused by the hitting of the vehicle. Further, in order to make the catalytic converter free from the adherence of soot to the surface of the honeycomb structure during the lean-burn operation, it is necessary to suppress the temperature of the honeycomb structure at a level lower than the burning temperature during the lean-burn operation and to impart a good heat-radiating property to the honeycomb structure. Furthermore, since in the three-way catalytic converter a high purifying performance can not be obtained when the exhaust gas contains a large amount of HC components
