What is the best evidence on when positron emission tomography (PET) is most likely to be beneficial and how does it compare to the published literature on clinical guidelines? This article provides an overview of the existing literature. While no studies have rigorously investigated the clinical value of PET at this point in time, clinical guidelines indicate that PET should be used for staging when: (1) there is no other alternative (e.g. missing data, unknown stage), (2) a low-risk individual (e.g. pN0) and (3) there is a need to avoid false-negative results (i.e. use of PET is beneficial). PET does not seem beneficial for staging in most other situations. There is significant overlap in the grey literature (not peer-reviewed) and clinical guidelines on when to use PET for staging. We have yet to determine which is most applicable to current clinical practice.Emmanuel Ratnaweera Emmanuel Ratnaweera (born 5 January 1987) is a Sri Lankan cricketer.
