A simple device for measurement of the dynamic refractive index. A device is described for measurement of the dynamic refractive index of aqueous solutions. The principle of operation is to focus an intense light beam onto a prism, whose optical axis passes through the solution of interest, and to measure the time dependent shift of the beam, which can be used to measure the dynamic refractive index. The device has an angular uncertainty of 3 degrees when measuring a layer of aqueous solution and its single-use detector can detect a refractive index change of about 0.3 diopters (D) over a wide
