A C A Both researchers report on the power of the cogitativa. Ethnologist Amy Alkon's research on the power of feeling is striking and leaves us in awe. The New York Times called her book, a NYT Notable Book of. Hyperthermophilic microorganisms occur naturally in deep-sea hydrothermal vents and other ecosystems. They are useful for biotechnological purposes, mainly because they are widely tolerant to various types of extreme environmental conditions, including extremely high temperatures and extremely low or high salinity, and have the unique capacity of robustly synthesizing a variety of biomolecules at the same time. They also provide the potential to produce a variety of useful compounds, including energy sources, antifreeze agents, and antioxidants. With the broad range of applications of hyperthermophiles, the species has been extensively studied not only to elucidate the mechanisms of adaptation to extreme environments, but also to develop possible applications. For example, one of the species that has been most intensively studied is Pyrococcus furiosus. P. furiosus is a hyperthermophilic archaeon that has several unique features, including that it can grow anaerobically at high temperature, that its optimal growth temperature is 70° C. to 90° C., and that it utilizes Fe(III) as a reduced Fe(II) acceptor. It also produces various energy-providing polymers, such as glycogen, poly- β -1,4-glucan, and poly- β -1,4-xylan, and facilitates the production of other biomass-derived compounds, including methanol and acetate, without growing on them. These properties mean that P. furiosus is a useful microorganism for production of energy sources, chemicals and materials, and anti-freeze agents in deep-sea hydrothermal vents. Recently, a growing number of polyhydroxyalkanoate-producing bacteria have been identified and characterized from various environments, including from psychrotolerant marine Bacteria (Hoffmann and Löffler, 1998), thermophiles (Pisera and Laub, 1993, Koyama et al., 1991, Gobler et al., 1998), and Arctic and Antarctic environments (Gobler et al., 1998, 2000, Thieme et al., 2000), but there have been no reports on the identification of any species of hypertherm
