I have an App that allows people to send invitations. In these invitations there are users and to invite a user there are two ways: To invite someone by username: inviter = current_user invited_by = User.find(inviter.id) To invite someone by email: inviter = current_user invited_by = User.find(params[:user_id]) Once the invitation is send, I need to know who sent the invitation so I can treat the invitation as a type of invitation (invite.type == "username" or invite.type == "email") and also store the user who invited. How can I obtain the user_id? I am using devise to manage the authentication, so maybe I can get this through the session? Or is there a better way of handling this problem? A: There's no standard way to get the invited_by user. Your second options is pretty standard, and the first should work. If you're worried about scalability, you could have a table that holds a timestamp and store the user_id there. Yes, you can access the current_user via the session with something like this: invited_by = User.find(params[:user_id]) if session[:user_id] # it's already in the session, so you can use it else # get the invitation record invite = Invitation.find(params[:id]) user = invite.invited_by session[:user_id]

= user.id end // Compression is the mechanism for zlib
