St Mary and All Saints' Church, Fintona St Mary and All Saints' Church is in the village of Fintona, County Derry, Northern Ireland. It is an Anglican parish church in the Diocese of Raphoe. The church is commonly called the Fintona Church. History The present Fintona church was built between 1847 and 1853 by Patrick Napier, a Belfast architect. It replaced an earlier church on the same site which had been destroyed by fire in 1828. The church was formerly within the parish of Killyclogher, and formed a mission with St Mary's Church, Killyclogher, in the Synod of Kells. The church contains several stained-glass windows by James Powell and Sons of Belfast. On 12 June 1940, during the Belfast Blitz, a Royal Air Force Lancaster bomber from RAF Furnace crashed into the churchyard. The crew bailed out and only one crew member was found alive. He had been treated for severe burns to his face and head, and his face was severely disfigured. Three crew members from the aircraft were recovered from the water at Dalmally Pier in County Londonderry, but all died of their injuries. Their bodies were buried in Killyclogher churchyard.
